EDAROTH to work on £1bn Welsh Housing framework

EDAROTH – a subsidiary of design, engineering and project management consultancy Atkins – is to provide end-to-end development solutions across north and mid Wales as part of a £1bn housing framework.

Under the four-year Welsh Procurement Alliance agreement, EDAROTH will work with local authorities and housing associations to meet housing targets through the provision of services that prioritise brownfield and under-utilised land within existing communities to help address social and economic challenges.

EDAROTH will also offer design and engineering expertise, the latest off-site manufacturing techniques and construction partnerships to deliver energy-efficient new homes at speed, volume and at a significantly reduced whole life cost compared to traditional new builds.

Mark Powell, EDAROTH Managing Director, said: “Social housing supply is a long-standing problem which is affecting millions of people across the UK.

“Our place on this framework gives us a great opportunity to help address some of the challenges experienced by communities and individuals in Wales by providing homes where they are most needed to support inclusive and sustainable outcomes.”

EDAROTH recently unveiled its first completed development which saw much needed social housing delivered in Lambeth, South London. The Hillside Gardens development – which is situated at the rear of existing council owned properties – was previously occupied by a derelict garage block but now adds new homes to Lambeth Council’s housing stock that will be rented at social level rents.
